The Unheard Voices of Birth Mothers

AFTHtv Special Helped Break the Silence and Give Voices to Women Who are Choosing Adoption

With the incredible response we have received since our launch of Adoptions From The Heart TV in November, we knew we needed to utilize the platform as a megaphone for the often unheard voices of adoption.

The most common narratives shared on social media and in the news focus on the adoptive parents and their journey to become a family through adoption. The quantity of stories only sharing this side of the process can often drown out the other voices that are just as important.

Many people, especially those outside of the adoption community, don’t have the opportunity to hear the voices of birth parents. To begin breaking down that barrier, we took AFTHtv on the road and sat in on one of our Delaware Office’s monthly birth mother support groups.

Sitting around a table, the women shared their experiences as well as advice for others giving viewers a peek into their world as birth mothers.

AFTH's Special: The Unheard Voices of Birth Mothers, aired in four parts throughout the month of February.

“You helped us all realize that we had a voice and that we should be proud to use it.” - Se’Ayra

Here are just a few reactions from viewers on social media:

"Very powerful words spoken from the heart. [The women] amaze me!"
"They sure are super women."
"Thank you for such an informative message."
"I wish all expecting mothers and fathers could watch this video!"
"Such a great discussion to have and so empowering."
AFTH counselor Amanda Aliberti explains why the birth parent support group is so important: I started the Birth Mother Support Group here in Delaware in 2017 to bring my clients together, to not only talk about their stories, but to really lean on one another and become mentors in their community. My goal was to give women a safe place to share their experiences of placing a child. A space for women to come together to talk, cry, laugh and create positive tools for improving their lives. The filming of AFTHTv's Special is giving a voice to an unspoken topic of women’s strength, courage and determination to fight for the life they want to give to their children. It has been my privilege and honor to counsel and support these women. They are my biggest motivation and inspiration.”

Lots of people who have had the pleasure of hearing these incredible women have asked what they can do to help! The birth mothers featured in the Special have already given so much, yet they want to do even more. They want to reach other women who are considering adoption or have placed who need extra support. We are now accepting donations specifically for the monthly support group to help with transportation and other costs such as refreshments, and childcare for children during group.

If you were inspired by these amazing women and their stories, please consider making a donation at www.tinyurl.com/BirthMotherSupportGroup

Did you miss the Special or any episode of AFTHTv for that matter? Don't worry! You can catch up on AFTHTs Facebook or YouTube pages.

Plans are already in the works for future AFTHTv episodes focusing on birthfathers, adoptees, transracial adoption and more.

Presenting Spring 2019 Birth Parent Scholarship Winner

Our Spring 2019 Birth Parent Scholarship winner, Hannah Myers is taking her talents to West Coast University. Hannah is pursuing a Bachelor of Science degree in Nursing with the hopes of working as a Labor and Delivery Nurse.

Adoptions From The Heart receives numerous essays every semester from birth parents who want to pursue a higher education. Birth parents tell us more about themselves, their adoption experience and their future goals.

It is an honor to present Hannah with the $5,000 Birth Parent Scholarship. Hannah’s story deeply inspired the scholarship committee. She is a hard-working individual who is determined to succeed in life and help other women along the way.

Hannah’s adoption story began in a unexpected way. She was a full time, dual-campus student finishing a pre-nursing program at California State University – San Marcos and Palomar Community College. She never imagined facing an unplanned pregnancy; especially under these circumstances.

“I found out I was pregnant two weeks before my 23rd birthday. The news was heavy, that’s the best way I can describe it.”

Although she had a very supportive family adoption was not initially her first choice. She took time to gather information about all of her options. She did not feel ready to raise her son and knew she couldn’t offer him everything she felt he deserved. After contemplating her options, she decided on adoption.

Hannah chose to place her son in an open adoption. Hannah was able to speak with a prospective adoptive couple and knew after their phone call that they were the right family.

Henry was born on August 16th and was placed with his adoptive parents on August 20th.

“Adoption was the absolute best and hardest decision I have ever made in my entire life.”

She received support from her parents and brother throughout the whole process; that support is something she’ll always be grateful for. They stood beside her during the most difficult period of her life. Although this was a hard process, it shed a light on her goals and allowed her to focus on the future.

Hannah started her Bachelor of Science in Nursing at the West Coast University in January for the 2019 Spring Semester. She is not only a student, but she also tutors anatomy classes, interns at a hospital and works part-time at the Boys and Girls Club in her town. Being a birth mother has humbled her and deepened her respect for women and life. Henry inspired her to specialize as a Labor and Delivery Nurse once she’s done with her nursing program.

“I want to thank my son for giving me this experience. I don’t think I would be where I am today if it wasn’t for him. Adoption was my saving grace. My son got a beautiful life with loving parents and I can focus on my goals for the future.”

We are so proud of Hannah and all she is doing to pursue her dreams. Your drive and motivation are inspiring to others. We wish you nothing but happiness and success!

Book Review: All You Can Ever Know

In her 2018 memoir “All You Can Ever Know”, Asian transracial adoptee Nicole Chung digs into issues of race, identity, and motherhood through the lens of adoption. Nicole was adopted through a closed, domestic adoption. She was always told “your birth parents were very sad they couldn’t keep you, but they thought adoption was the best thing for you”. Her adoptive family shared this positive narrative about her birth parents, but had no interest in an open adoption relationship with them. They had some insecurities about the birth parents’ roles in Nicole’s adoption story, making it uncomfortable for Nicole to ask in-depth questions later in life.

Almost all adoptees have some curiosity about their biological roots; transracial adoptees without mirrors in their communities may feel this even more strongly. Having a secure attachment in their adoptive families does not reduce this curiosity. Seeing their adoptive parents’ insecurity about their birth parents can cause some adoptees to choose not to search, or to search in secrecy.

Nicole describes curiosity about her biological family during her childhood and adolescence. Her racial difference and lack of mirrors in her community makes her especially interested in learning about her Korean heritage through a connection with her biological family and their culture. Nicole understands that she must tread lightly with her parents on the topic, and when she does address it, realizes they don’t know much, and don’t want to discuss it.

It isn’t until she is pregnant with her first child that Nicole realizes how important it really feels to her to have more information about her biological family. It begins to hit her that she has little information about her biological family’s history to share with her future child. She also begins to feel a different connection with her biological mother during pregnancy as she realizes the strong bonds built during that time:

All of these realizations pushed Nicole to actively search for her birth family. Due to the laws in her state, she must do so through an intermediary who will help mediate the communication between the parties. The discoveries Nicole makes through this process are beautiful and challenging, enlightening and difficult. She navigates the unknown territory of building relationships with biological relatives and shares thoughtful insights along the way.

Nicole is generous in sharing her journey and its impact on her relationship with her adoptive family, her own motherhood, and her identity. She shares this passage near the end of the book:

“Reunion has done more than restore relationships that had once been beyond my ability to fully imagine; it has enabled a shift in existing ones. It has forced my adoptive parents to think about my birth parents not as poor, pitiable immigrants or people who might steal me away, but real people with their own feelings, fears, and failings. It’s forced them to think about how I must have felt when I lost not only my first family, but all knowledge of my roots.”

This book is a must-read for prospective adoptive parents, especially those considering transracial adoption and openness. A lot can be learned from seeing what others have done well as well as ways they could have improved. There are always benefits from listening to the voices of adult adoptees.
March was National Social Work Month. We are so honored to have such amazing and caring social workers and counselors as a part of AFTH. Thank you to all the personal stories our social media followers shared about how special their social workers are to them.

We asked our social workers what’s one of the most memorable moments they have had through their work in the field of adoption, the top answer typically relates to being able to call families and say “this is the call you been waiting for, you have been selected!”

One social worker recalled when she called a family to tell them they have been matched and they broke a lamp when they jumped up and ran to grab their phone once they saw it was the agency calling.

Another social worker said that her wonderful moment is when the prospective adoptive parents are in the hospital and it’s like a switch turns on and they finally "get it". There have been a few moments when she has had families just look at her and in that moment, when things became real, they fully understood why open adoption is important.

You can see how they instantly love their child’s birth parents even though they really don’t know who they are. They just met! At that point, I feel like I can really take a deep breath and know the birth parents will be taken care of and respected. I don’t think outsiders understand how much stress a social worker carries regarding the connection between expecting and adoptive parents. It's the connection that will help carry the openness throughout the child’s life.

That first connection between families is so important and incredible for our staff to witness. It's often the very beginning of a lifelong journey.

Another social worker recalls one moment that really stands out to her that highlights the special bond of love and support created through adoption:

I had a very sweet birth mother, totally on her own in making this plan. She was so strong but I could see on the inside she was terrified. She also had no support so I knew she may be questioning her decision.

Her heart and her head were at war. She wrestled with doing what she felt was right for herself and the baby OR caving in to her family's will and parenting instead. She knew she would struggle to parent, however the choice was tempting in order to win back her family's support.

We went out to lunch to meet the prospective adoptive parents she had chosen for the first time and she asked the question that in my experience almost everyone asks, "so what are you planning on naming the baby?"

The prospective adoptive parents replied, “well we aren't really sure. We have a short list that we are considering but we haven’t decided.” They then surprisingly asked, “Do you have any names you were hoping for or liked? We can’t promise it would be the final name, but we would promise to consider it.” The expecting mother answered, “I always kind of liked Oliver.”

The prospective adoptive fathers immediately responded “Wow. Yes we really like that name too, we also really like Julien.” The expecting mother got teary eyed and said “that is also one of my favorites too!”

The prospective dad opened the notes app on his iPhone and showed the expecting mother that Julien and Oliver were not only on the short list, but at the top of their list...everyone was in tears. At that moment the expecting mother had absolutely no doubt that this was the right decision and that she picked the perfect family.

As a social worker, I knew they had made a genuine connection and would all be ok. You can’t ask for anything more than that!

Agency News

AFTH Office Update
In 2019, the agency is moving towards a more virtual model, removing some brick and mortar offices in favor of smaller shared office spaces, and mobile social workers. Though our services won’t change, the way we work will be evolving.

In February, our Pittsburgh Office moved to a smaller location across from the Westmoreland County courthouse. The office will be used by appointment only and all mail should be sent to PO Box 1472, New Castle, PA 16103.

In March, our Central Pennsylvania Office moved to a smaller office. This office will be used by appointment only and all mail should be sent to 5630 Linglestown Road, Unit #3012, Harrisburg, PA 17112.

Phone numbers for these offices remain the same, and you can continue to reach your social worker by phone or email to set up visits, ask questions, and receive support.

For placed families, these changes affect the logistics of where you will send your birth parents’ correspondence but does not affect the relationship you have with the agency or your social worker. If your birth parent worked with the Pittsburgh or Central PA office, we ask that you begin sending your correspondence to YOUR local office instead of the birth parents’ office. If both you and your birth parent worked with the Pittsburgh or Central PA office, you can continue to send your correspondence to that office.

Domestic Program Update
As of March 1, AFTH will only be accepting applications from prospective adoptive parents who are minimally open to children of African-American heritage.

All applicants will be assessed through the home study process to determine if this is an appropriate fit. If it is determined that transracial adoption would not be appropriate for a family during their home study process, they can choose to be added to our wait list and provided with their home study to take to other agencies to pursue adoption.

Families not open to adopting an African-American child may join our waiting list. When the program is opened to all applicants, families on the wait list will have first priority. If you have any questions, please contact your social worker.

Reminder about Continuing Education
AFTH requires waiting families to have 5 continuing education hours each year to be completed at the time of the home study update or yearly home visit. The Hospital Expectations Refresher Webinar is a yearly requirement for all families.

There are different ways, online and in-person, to meet this requirement. AFTH Education Series Classes and support groups count towards hours. Social workers can provide a list of additional opportunities to gain continuing education hours outside of AFTH classes.

Summer Picnics
Warmer weather is here and we have started planning for our summer picnics (details on pages 7-10). We are looking forward to seeing many returning as well as new and waiting families at our summer events.

The picnics are a great time to visit with your child's birth parents. If you are in an open adoption and want to extend a letter of invitation to your child's birth parents, please be sure to send a letter to your office soon to pass along to your child's birth parents to allow time for a response.
AFTHtv

We are thrilled at the positive response we've had since launching Adoptions From The Heart TV last November. We were honored to have Birth Mothers sharing their stories and offering advice to expecting parents for our Special: The Unheard Voices of Birth Mothers in February (details on front page).

On March 5th, we kicked off Season 2 of AFTHtv starting with an introduction to AFTH's Associate Director Heidi Gonzalez. On March 12th we hosted Dr. Meyer to talk about the effects of prenatal drug and alcohol exposure followed by an episode aimed at helping ease the fear of making the first call to an agency by expecting parents. Our last episode in March was for prospective adoptive parents about parenting during the revocation period.

Upcoming AFTHtv April episodes include:
Telling My Story as a Birth Mother, Prospective Adoptive Parents and Expecting Parents Meeting for the First Time, My Son Decided to Search for His Birth Mother, Moving from Infertility to Adoption, and Birth Mother Perspective: What Open Adoption looks Like for Me.

Agency Waiting Statistics
As of March 1st, 75% of AFTH’s waiting families have been waiting for 18 months or less and 59% a year or less.

For families with keys open to African-American children, as of March 1st, 85% of families were waiting 1 year or less, and 67% have been waiting for 6 months or less.

Support Groups
Support is a key element in the adoption process whether you are an expecting parents considering adoption or a prospective adoptive parent waiting to be matched.

AFTH offices host support groups for waiting families as well as expecting and birth parents who have placed who would benefit from being with other people who have walked in their shoes. To learn more about the support groups being held in your local office, contact your social worker. AFTH also has an online Facebook Birth Parent Support Group. Birth mothers and fathers who want to join can email BrittanyB@afth.org.

Topics YOU Want to More Info About
Whether it's an AFTHtv episode, a post on social media or a blog topic, we do our best to cover a variety of topics from all aspects of the adoption triad. We appreciate feedback from our audience to know if there are additional topics they would like us to provide more information about. If you have a topic idea, please contact KristyG@afth.org.
International Adoption News

AFT\H prides itself on keeping abreast of news regarding inter-country adoption. We collaborate with agencies across the U.S. that provide inter-country adoption placement services. AFT\H is able to provide Home Studies, Education, Post-Adoption/Placement Reports and Services, and other assistance in support of international adoptions. Email us at adoption@afth.org to see how we can help you, including referring you to one of these partner agencies.

International Adoption Statistics & Legislation

Recently released numbers from the U.S. State Department show international adoptions continue to decrease. In the 2018 FY, there were 4,059 international adoptions, 655 less than in 2017.

These numbers are down 84% from 2004, the peak of international adoption, which saw 22,989 international adoptions finalized. There was, however, a rise in international adoptions from Colombia and India in 2018.

While there are many different factors causing the drop in international adoptions (Hague Convention, countries changing regulations or shutting down adoption entirely), there are constant attempts to introduce legislature aimed at reforming the international adoption process.

In February, a new bill, The Intercountry Adoption Advisory Committee Act, S. 363, was introduced by Sen. Roy Blunt. If passed, it would call for the U.S. Secretary of State to establish the Intercountry Adoption Advisory Committee. The committee's purpose would be to coordinate policies and programs regarding intercountry adoptions while also making recommendations to improve the process.

Several similar bills introduced over the past few years have all stalled in committee. S. 363 is currently under review of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee for consideration.

International Adoption Challenges

Over the past few years, there have been reports of more and more people who were adopted internationally as children now discovering that they are not U.S. citizens. Congress passed a law in 2000, giving automatic citizenship to international adoptees. However, it only offered protection for those under 18 years of age leaving anyone born before 1983 at risk. The proposed Adoptee Citizenship Act, introduced in 2015 and again in 2018, would have closed this loophole, however, the act never made it out of committee.

The Adoptee Rights Campaign estimates that between 24,551 and 49,102 adult adoptees are currently living without citizenship. In many cases, they might not even know and typically find out accidentally for example when applying for a passport or having a background check for work.

Adoption advocacy organization have not stopped fighting for citizenship for those who legally came into the U.S. as adoptees. The challenge they face is that it's been seen as an immigration issue and not an adoption one.

Chinese Adoptees Connected By DNA Test

Stefanie Beard of the Philadelphia area was adopted as a baby from China through AFT\H. For Christmas last year she and her family took DNA tests. She never thought she'd find biological connections here in the U.S., let alone in a college not too far from her own. Jeff Gammage of the Philadelphia Inquirer highlighted this incredible story about their surprising connection, "DNA Helpers Chinese Adoptees Do What Was Once Impossible: Locate Blood Relatives in This Country."
Child Tax Credit

Important News for Recently Placed Families
As a result of changes made in the 2017 tax reform law, the IRS now requires families to have Social Security Numbers for their children in order to claim the Child Tax Credit for them as a dependent.

In the past, families were able to use an Adoption Taxpayer Identification Number (ATIN) for this purpose. However, as indicated in the tax reform in order to claim the Child Tax Credit for the 2018-2025 tax years, an ATIN number is no longer sufficient and your child's Social Security Number is required.

PLEASE NOTE - this is about the yearly Child Tax Credit for dependents and not the larger one time Adoption Tax Credit which is up to $13,800 per child for qualifying families.

The Academy of Adoption and Assisted Reproduction Attorneys (AAAA) is working with their lobbyists to address this issue. It appears that the changes in the tax reform were aimed at eliminating the use of Individual Taxpayer Identification Number (ITIN) but that excluding ATIN numbers was an oversight.

Unfortunately it takes time to correct policy however AAAA is looking for real-life experiences from adoptive parents who run into this issue. By sharing your story with AAAA, it bolsters their case and helps bring awareness of the issue in Washington. To share how the tax reform impacted your family, contact Info@adoptionART.org.

We encourage recently placed and finalized families, to reach out to your representative to encourage them to push for a solution to this problem. You can find contact information for your representatives at www.usa.gov/elected-officials.
